MAKE YOUR HOME A LEARNING ENVIRONMENT FOR KIDS.

A natural learning environment at home can produce happier and better educated children at school.

As early as infancy, there are windows of opportunity to learn through visual stimulation. By creating a learning environment rich in sensory stimulation, children develop a natural curiosity. Children deprived of such experiences, develop brains 20-30% smaller than normal for their age.

Older children spend 30-40 hours per week in school. That leaves at least 100 hours of waking time away from school. Allowing for extra curricular activities, sports and screen time—children are left with just as much time at home to learn as at school. In addition to providing children with the proper tools and resources to develop and enhance their sense of curiosity, parents can create an area in the home completely devoted to the child's interests. Artistic murals help to accomplish this and are increasingly more desirable, not only for decoration, but for stimulation. Whether it be a child's bedroom, music room, playroom or mini science lab, the walls can be transformed to create a brand new world and lay a foundation for effective thinking. "Parents want to do what's best for their children," says Wallz 4 Kidz muralist, Lisa Courtney-Holmes "and growing up with artistically rendered walls develops imagination and inspires creativity."

"Our kids adore their murals", says Shannon LeBeau, recent client of Wallz 4 Kidz, "and really appreciate quiet time in their own rooms. My children are both good students and I hope their whimsical walls will inspire them to even greater success." According to Courtney-Holmes, murals create an umbrella under which privacy, story-telling, game-playing and even structured learning can flourish for children of all ages.

Wallz4Kidz.com is a newly launched whimsical children's mural business, catering to parents, schools, child care, and health care facilities. The artist focuses on custom paintings produced quickly and economically.
